NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 24, 1881,

FRIZZES.

Your eyes are like two robin's eggs. Your cheeks are hot coals' glow, And from your shapply head depend

Your nose is tilted toward the sky (A most bewitching nose, I vow); It, too, looks up entranced at those Sweet frizzles on your brow.

Rubics your lips endow. Those lips that seem to lisp of those Dear frizzles on your brow.

Your hair is anyhow, In twists and braids and corkscrew curls And fruzies on your brow.

Prate not to me of idiot fringe, Or harms on bison's prow;

hose frizzles on your brow. And e'en when moisture-burdened airs

Those frizzles on your brow.

Oh, could I see that forehead once That's hid so modest now: Oh, darling, lift but once that well, Those frizzles on your brow!

Forgive my too presumptuous song: Perlans I've said enow; But still in silence I'll adore These frizzles on your brow.

An Open Letter in the President's Behalf.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN: The Scriptures allow that "rulers must to be stuck up in his rear greater than his throne per a he contrived to place alike himself and a righteous cause he had sworn to defend in more imminent peril than were either Daniel in the lion's den, Jonah in the whale, or Moses in the bulrushes: for not only was it of his own volition, but it plainly invited a perplexity of such farreaching significance that nothing short of divers miracles can afford a semblance of relief and he miracles can afford a semblance of relief, and he well knows that miracles are not now in vogue. The press is the chief of the accepted mediums between right and wrong, and just in proportion that it ventilates maked truths the task of making the worse appear the better side will be increased, and hence the victous and "possessed" can only be relied upon to aid dubious causes, and their lies, like chickens, will come home to roost. Moral: The President cannot too soon let it be distinctly and publicly known who is President. L.

TEA AND ITS MANUFACTURE.

Recollections of an Old Bachelor-Possibilities of Its Growth in America.

I love my cup of tea, whether it be Oolong, Souchong, or Bohea, but think I rather prefer Mandarin, and being an old bachelor is no reason why I should not have my say about "the cups that cheer but not inebriate" as well as the spinsters and other people. In my early youthand it has been a long time since then-the fra grant, steaming cup always called up pictures of almond-eyed, swarthy celestials, pagodas, pape houses, and pigtails. The very names of the severa varieties were suggestive of bamboo, lacquere ware, fans, and pozcelaine vases, ornamented with grotesque figures, which are almost as much of mystery to me to-day as they were then. Now change seems to be coming over all this, and instea of looking to China and India for the supply of te for the future we shall have it manufacture within a few hours' ride of our own door. I have bee extremely interested in the discussion of the sub ject which has been going on in the press for some time, and in the effort of Mr. Saunders severa years ago to establish the cultivation of tea in thi

HIS PAMPHLET ON "TEA CULTURE as a Probable American Industry," published i 1879, was extremely interesting, and shows wha has been done and what can be done. In 1858 th Commissioner of Patents received ten thousan tea-plants from China, which in the course of time were increased to thirty thousand, and were dis tributed through the Southern States. The war coming on soon after, put a stop to the business a that time. In 1862 the Agricultural Departmen was organized, and now more than a hundre thousand plants are annually set out and culti vated. Mr. John Jackson is at present in charge o the plantation in the South, and, as he has spen some time in India among the tea regions, we look for great things from the experiment in the future Some persons claim that it is impossible TO MANUFACTURE TEA
